

Upper Cretaceous marine sedimentation was never properly established at the Prawn site, where the Upper Cretaceous environment is best described as marginal marine. There is no evidence of extensive marine, dark mudstone deposition as in the Port Campbell embayment.