

The absence of moveable hydrocarbons could be due to deep invasion effects on the logs. This is considered unlikely as the caliper shows no evidence of low permeability reservoirs and the mud weight was not excessively high. A more likely explanation is that the shows and low water saturations are evidence of migration of oil through the sequence. Updip closure has been mapped and there is the potential for an updip accumulation.