Abstract

Historical exploration data has been reviewed, recollected and then remodeled.

Fieldwork has been conducted to define topography and indicative strata adjacent to prospective drill sites.

Land ownership details have been obtained.

Design of a drilling program has been undertaken.

Drilling tenders issued and quotes evaluated.

In the forthcoming period we expect to undertake drilling the timing of which will be subject to obtaining land access.

Work undertaken during this year included further geological data base analysis in order to evaluate the most appropriate locations for confirmation boreholes. The work involved surface mapping, geophysics and physical inspection.

Further identification of landowners and title information also continued.

No further work was conducted on rail and port infrastructure, as that identified in the previous year accommodated pre-feasibility requirements.

Further work will proceed after the logging and analysis of the 25 drill holes which have been completed in EL65/2007, as those results will have implications for the future direction of work in EL26/2008.

An extension of time is requested to complete year 2 commitments under the Exploration Licence (requested under separate letter).

1 Introduction

1.1.1 Exploration rationale (objective) and geological setting

This area is being explored in conjunction with adjacent tenements 25/2008 and 41/2008. A major common structure to the three areas, the Jericho Trough, has constrained coal occurrence throughout the total area.

The Lake Tiberius area comprises parts of several previous EL areas originally held and explored by CRA in the early to mid 1980's. Titles covering parts of the present title area included Parattah EL 18/82, Kempton EL 19/82 and Jericho EL 20/82. The current EL 26/2008 granted in this area has been designated as Lake Tiberius, extending to the north and south of that physical feature and covering an area of 220 square kilometers. This new title does not include the previously identified resource area of York Plains which lies to the east of Oatlands and south of Woodbury.

The principal objective of exploring in the Jericho region is to develop a geological and geophysical foundation for coal resource definition of the near surface Permo-Triassic coal measures. Typically the Coal measures are associated with a characteristic lithic sandstone sequence which has been preserved from erosion by dolerite capping. Continuity of the coal seams has been indicated by past workers through a combination of lithological, geophysical and analytical correlation. The Jericho area comprises a series of structural trends north-south and extends for a minimum of 50 kilometers long and varies from approximately 2-3 kilometers wide. Graben structures dominate the configuration of possible coal seams.

Following the remodeling of rudimentary historical borehole data, some of which is unreliable we now intend to test the veracity of open cut coal deposition through a series of exploratory boreholes to define structure and presence of coal seams.

Land owner access constraints have predominantly limited the siting of boreholes in the past. In particular some of the data obtained through a thorough investigation of Departmental records indicates that certain boreholes are realistically best described as "water bores".

2 Review of previous work

2.1.1 Prior to current tenement

The Lake Tiberius area comprises parts of several previous EL areas originally held and explored by CRA in the early to mid 1980's. Titles covering parts of the present title area included Parattah EL 18/82, Kempton EL 19/82 and Jericho EL 20/82. The current EL 26/2008 granted in this area has been designated as Lake Tiberius, extending to the north and south of that physical feature and covering an area of 220 square kilometers. This new title does not include the previously identified resource area of York Plains which lies to the east of Oatlands and south of Woodbury.

2.1.2 During current tenement

Initial appraisal of the data package leads to the view that the CRA geological assessment was carried out in a professional manner and included;

- Literature / data search – particularly of numerous existing water bores
- Photo and geophysical interpretation
- Field mapping
- Structural interpretation
- Drilling target development

- Core and open hole drilling
- Down hole geophysics
- Progressive reporting to MRT (Mineral Resources Tasmania)

The data generated was extensive. Regrettably, as with so much material provided for records at that time, the process of microfiche and subsequent conversion to electronic files (predominantly Acrobat) has resulted in substantial instances of poor copies of what were already inferior-quality field plans. Further data access is impeded by the fact that the borelogs and geophysics were generally provided as appendices to progress reports and it can be time-consuming to locate a borelog in a 360 page Acrobat file with no index; again the odd-sized pages have led to difficult image handling.

The exploration focused on defining coal depositional environments within elongate graben structures. The major feature partly within this area was the Jericho graben structure, extending up to 50 kilometres on a NNW – SSE trend, and averaging several kilometres in width. Scout drilling which took place along the feature was possibly somewhat reduced in effectiveness by the need to drill on public access land; certainly not all the sites on the planning map have been drilled. Some hypotheses regarding seam development have been developed and could be useful in future exploration. Unexplained termination of CRA field activities occurred abruptly in 1985; a search as to whether there were other subsequent titles could be enlightening.

3 Exploration completed during the reporting period

3.1.1 Literature review

A thorough review of Departmental records was undertaken, this comprising the data collection of all hard copy historical information (borehole cross-sections, reports and interpretations) and the recompilation of that data into electronic form. Once having completed that exercise which involved several months of input, that data was subsequently recompiled for remodeling onto a Mincom Minescape platform.

3.1.2 Regional exploration activities

An extensive search was undertaken of land titles. In addition several field trips were undertaken of the area including contact with landowners to derive an understanding of regional topography and geological settings.

In respect to land ownership many Landowners have been identified in the tenement. A copy of the landowner information is attached herewith including a plan of the area.

Contact with several of the key landowners has been attempted this possibly relating to obtaining access to commence an exploration program.

3.1.3 Prospect- based exploration activities

Significant coal occurrences have been inferred (CRAE, 1984) to exist within the Jericho graben structure which extends some 50 kilometres N-S through the Midlands region – Resource Generation Limited titles do not include the most southerly extent of this geological feature. The graben is usually between 1 and 5 kilometres wide and bounded by sub-vertical flanking faults. Additionally the region is intersected by a number of secondary faults; they are generally vertical or normal and trend NE-SW.

Previous exploration has been by way of both core and non-core drilling (predominantly circa 1982 – 1985) plus water bores which may be anything up to a century old. This data has been the subject of some rather speculative interpretation, (by previous title holders) leading ultimately to statements of ‘hypothetical reserves’. Under the present JORC Code these results would constitute, at best, exploration results and would not support any quantification or public statement of coal resources. The second major source of geological data to support sub-surface exploration in the area is the State geological mapping; there is good 1:50,000 coverage plus some 1:25,000 areas in digital format; mapping and publishing is circa 1976. If the data presented is accurate (spot verification field mapping required) then these maps should prove invaluable in identifying coal deposits. There are some structural and remote sensing geophysical data available for the area but difficulties have been experienced in loading and locating (map gridding and scaling, large data file handling) this data and it has proven to be of minimal use. There is good magnetometer data in the far north of the area but sparse airborne survey data over the balance of the area.

Sixteen prospective drilling sites have been selected based on the interpretation of the above data. All of these sites will be drilled as chip-sampled open holes in the first instance. As far as possible these sites have been selected to potentially provide an intersection of the “Sequence 1” strata of previous workers – this is the uppermost member of the Triassic stratum of the region and has been inferred to be the most prospective section for economic coal seam occurrence. These new bore sites are generally some 2 – 3 kilometres apart but it is believed that if there is continuity of seams over significant areas, then this additional drilling in combination with what may be gleaned from past work, has the potential to define some economic coal occurrences. Should there be a potentially interesting intersection in any one of these bores then some step-off drilling will be undertaken in the immediate vicinity as part of this stage of the Jericho graben assessment – at this time allowance is made for 2 target areas to be assessed with 5 holes, including one core hole, in each of the prospective targets. Jericho graben exploration drilling is detailed in the following attachments.

- Proposed drill hole locations are as shown on the attached plan “... / Jericho Bore site Plan _ April 2009.pdf”.
- Detailed drill site locations and predicted intersections are detailed in the attached “... / Jericho Exploration Boreholes _ April 2009.xlsx” (TABLE 2).
- Estimated costs for these exploration activities are included in “... / Tasmanian Exploration Budget _ April 2009.xlsx”.

Summary of proposed exploration for next year :

A series of fully cored and open holes are proposed to be undertaken over the suite of adjoining tenements within the Resource Generation Ltd group. This encapsulates 25/2008, 26/2008, 41/2008 & 65/2007. The plan for the Jericho Trough is attached to this return, however the first series of holes has been completed in 65/2007 and following the analysis of coal core a further review of the program will be completed prior to undertaking land access negotiations and physical drilling.

An extension of time is requested to complete year 2 commitments under the Exploration Licence (requested under separate letter).

4 Discussion of results

Further exploratory drilling is required to assist in defining the nature of structures and the coal occurrences within those which based on work to date indicate the presence of various grabens. In the event that initial drilling is successful in this regard, it is believed that further regional drilling may prove and extend the viable limits of the deposit.

Following this stage in the proving of the resource, and assuming results continue to be encouraging, a significant grid-infill drilling program would be undertaken. Coal quality of the deposit will also be addressed as part of these drilling and sample analysis activities; it must be recognised at all times that coal occurrences in this coalfield are predominantly poorer-quality high-ash steaming coals. Finally, a bulk sampling exercise would need to be carried out – the most appropriate sampling method remains undecided at this time.

5 Conclusions

Investigate the presence and possible quantity of coal within the deposit as historically interpretations have to be considered to be unreliable based on the nature of exploration previously undertaken. This was mainly due to limited access. Subject to obtaining adequate access a drilling program is to be undertaken in order to derive the viable presence of coal occurrences.

A significant number of landowners are present in the tenement and this will require considerable management to ensure ease of access and to minimize any negative sentiment toward exploration or subsequent activity.

6 Environment

Generally the area comprises a variation of undulating to steep properties which vary in agricultural uses.

Economic conditions have been unfavourable and this is reflected in a general “run-down state” of infrastructure. Until recent rains, drought conditions have prevailed for a number of years.

The currently planned drilling program has been designed to result in minimal impact to the area and any disturbance to the land will be rehabilitated at the completion of drilling.

7 Expenditure

Expenditure to date has amounted to $147,720 this being a pro-rata calculation for work conducted on all three Jericho tenements ($65,965 during 2008/09 period, $81,755 during 2009/10 period). Please note these figures include the salary costs of the supervising geologist (however the expenditure figures in the quarterly reports submitted have not included this cost). Also the expenditure figure shown in our previous MRT Annual Report (2008/09) used a forecast expenditure in error (rather than actual figures as intended).

Further exploration will be undertaken following initial exploration which will assist in defining the presence and location of viable coal sequences. A budget for the exploration program will be prepared once the results of the data analysis are known for the drilling conducted in EL65/2007. It is envisaged that Licence conditions will be met subject to initially achieving access and subsequent success of the first program.
