

hole collars and attitudes could be determined so that the holes would be positioned with a much greater degree of proficiency than could possibly be hoped for at present.

A ground magnetic survey could also be invaluable in providing information on lithology or possibly in tracing the potentially 'mineralised' zones if they exhibit a magnetic signature.

Respectfully submitted,

K.E. LE BROCQ.

Geophysicist.