

is present along many small fractures and shearing planes and it has also invaded and partly replaced small areas of the rock. Some of it has crystallized in fractures in quartz phenocrysts.

Conclusion:

Extensively deformed and locally crushed and sheared acid volcanic rock in which all original textures other than evidence of quartz phenocrysts have been obliterated.